THE CENTURY was founded, and its first Constitution adopted, January 13, 1847. One hundred gentlemen engaged or interested in Letters and the Fine Arts had been invited to join in forming the Association, of which number forty-two accepted the invitation and became Founders. Forty-six others joined during the year.

While the first Constitution did not mention any limit to membership, the intention of the Founders was to set the limit at one hundred members, which made them give the new Association its name, The Century.

On March 7, 1857, it was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, which was amended March 29, 1883.

The following table shows the limit to membership as declared by successive constitutional amendments:

Date of Amendment	Limit
March 5, 1853.....	200 Members
March 7, 1857.....	250 “
May 7, 1859.....	350 “
February 1, 1862.....	400 “
April 7, 1866.....	500 “
February 6, 1875.....	600 “

Date of Amendment	Limit
December 5, 1885.....	700 Members
May 3, 1890.....	800 "
February 6, 1892.....	1000 Resident Members 300 Non-Resident Members
December 3, 1921.....	400 Non-Resident Members
January 14, 1928.....	500 Non-Resident Members

From the Spring of 1847 to the Spring of 1849 it occupied rooms at No. 945 Broadway.

From the Spring of 1849 to the Spring of 1850 it occupied rooms at No. 435 Broome Street.

From the Spring of 1850 to May, 1852, it occupied rooms at No. 575 Broadway.

From May, 1852, to the Spring of 1857, it occupied the house at No. 24 Clinton Place (Now 46 East 8th Street).

From the Spring of 1857 to January 5, 1891, it occupied the house at No. 109 (old No. 42) East Fifteenth Street.

On January 10, 1891, it removed to its present Club-house, No. 7 West Forty-third Street.

On May 4, 1901, John Bigelow and Parke Godwin, only surviving members of The Column, a literary society founded in 1825, presented to The Century the privileges of fellow-membership with them. The silver memorial column bears a lamp which since 1858 had burned at every meeting of The Column, and is now lighted at each gathering of The Century.

BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

The Board of Management of the Century Association submit the following for the year 1937:

The membership a year ago was 1370. It is now 1387, classified as follows:

Resident Members, paying dues.....	892
Non-resident Members, paying dues.....	429
Absent and other members, exempt.....	66
	1387

Seventy-seven members have been added to our rolls since the last annual meeting, 51 resident and 26 non-resident members, three members have been transferred to the resident class and eight to the non-resident class.

Twelve members have resigned, and one dropped, 47 have died. There are now 108 vacancies in the resident class and 71 in the non-resident class.

There are now 62 candidates in the resident class and 33 in the non-resident class.

REPORT OF THE ART COMMITTEE

Among the exhibitions of the year which were outstanding were three of unusual interest. The January exhibition consisted of portraits owned by New York City Clubs. The clubs co-operating in lending their art treasures for this show were The Brook, The Grolier Club, The Harvard Club, The Links Club, The Players, The Union Club, The Union League Club, The University Club, The New York Yacht Club. This exhibition opened January 9, concluded January 31.

The second important exhibition consisted of the memorial exhibition of paintings and drawings by Thomas Moran, 1837-1937. This was an exhibition of great distinction and wide interest. It was held from March 7 to March 28.

The third outstanding exhibition consisted of Spanish Romanesque Frescoes, XII century paintings from the chapel of San Bandelio, in the Soria Province, Castile, April 1 to May 14.

A jury consisting of Maitland F. Griggs, Duncan Phillips and Stephen C. Clark was appointed to choose for purchase for the club a painting and pieces of sculpture, using the purchase fund established for this purpose. Their choice was Gifford Beale's "Wingesheek Beach" and John Held, Jr.'s, "Clydesdale Stallion."

HOUSE COMMITTEE

After the monthly dinner on February 6, a view of the Harvard Tercentenary film, showing the second day of the proceedings, starting with the sound of the Bow Bells, specially radioed from London. The Harvard film was shown by special permission of the University, through the kindness of our fellow member, Jerome D. Greene, who spoke before and during the showing of the film.

March 6, our fellow member, Mr. Vilhjalmur Stefansson, gave a talk on some of his experiences in the Arctic.

May 6, Mr. Herbert T. Strong showed some remarkable pictures and talked on "Exploring the Magic World of Color," made possible through the use of polarized light, a new and fascinating subject.

December 4, D. Graham Hutton, Esq., of London, associate editor of The Economist, gave an informal talk on present-day conditions in the principal European countries.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON LITERATURE

The library lost a most devoted and generous friend in Leonard Mackall. A lover of books in the finest sense, rich in the lore of books, a distinguished collector, he gave many valuable and rare editions to the Century in his lifetime. In his will he bequeathed to us one thousand dollars to "be spent gradually and carefully for the purchase of books."

In November the Committee had the gallery for an exhibition of the portraits, books and manuscripts of the authors, bookmen and journalists who were members of the Century in the eighties and early nineties. Worthy of their traditions and in tribute to them were the poems of Dr. John H. Finley and Leonard Bacon and the story-telling of Irving Bacheller on the evening of the November monthly meeting.

8 REPORT OF BOARD OF MANAGEMENT

During the year the library acquired by purchase 142 books ; and received 72 books from the following members :

Fellow-Centurions who left our living membership in 1937 numbered 47. This compares with 53 in 1936, and is almost exactly the same as the average for the full twenty years of the present Secretary's tenure which are completed tonight. During that period, the annual list has ranged from the 31 of 1923 to the 58 of 1930. If measured both by the part they played in life and by the closeness with which they were personally knit to the Century, our list tonight is perhaps the most varied and interesting of any annual summary in the twenty years.

Few faces were more familiar to the Century than that of ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON. Most of Johnson's particular achievement occurred in the longer past. He was identified editorially, from 1881 to 1909, with the Century Magazine in its palmy days, and from 1909 to 1913 was its editor-in-chief. Like his Century colleague Buel, Robert U. Johnson's reminiscence in after years reverted constantly to that brilliant episode in periodical literature but, perhaps unlike Buel, his interest in events of his later life-time never flagged. His conversation regarding all of them was that of a judicial but intensely absorbed spectator; notably so at the Century's luncheon-table, where the veteran club-man with the well-groomed white beard and the kindly eyes always fitted congenially into the circle. If his own talk frequently turned to installation of American worthies in New York University's Hall of Fame, to selection of each new occupant of it by popular vote, and to the ceremonies accompanying each of such arrivals, it was because of Johnson's ardent preoccupation with contemporary public duties.

His best work on the Century Magazine was done when the immensely successful series of Civil War reminiscences was obtained from surviving commanders. Buel conceived and planned that program, but Johnson co-operated loyally, and was personally instrumental in persuading General Grant to write for the Century what afterward became the nucleus of the general's "Personal Memoirs." Johnson himself was fond of recalling how Grant, then in flourishing private circumstances, at first begged off from the task, insisting that Badreau's Life was history enough; then how, after the disastrous Grant & Ward failure, the general timidly asked that the offer to him be renewed; then how, when his first written manuscript came in, the Century editors were dismayed to find that it read like a routine report to the War Department, and how, finally, Johnson applied himself to the task of teaching General Grant that he could write, regarding his campaigns, a human-interest story of intimate personal reminiscence. Grant learned the lesson from his patient and admiring teacher; the result was an addition to our literature.

Johnson's wide acquaintance, in the literary field especially; his championship, even in old age, of such public causes as international copyright, international peace, and preservation of our country's scenic wonders—all these were known to his fellow-Centurions. So were his frequent poems. His friendship for Italy was a life-long quality; he organized in war-time American relief plans for that country's soldiers and citizens, and in 1920 was appropriately designated as Ambassador to Italy. Like his predecessor, Thomas Nelson Page, Johnson was able to meet on equal terms of cordiality the Italian King and premier and the European diplomats whom he encountered at post-war conferences. Personally, he might well have adorned those gatherings—as his fellow-Americans must have imagined when they saw that distinguished figure, with the crimson diplomatic sash across his shirt-front and the foreign medals on the lapel, walk down the aisle to greet New York's visitor, Marshal Foch.

Sometimes the Century's remembrance is as pleasant of quiet fellow-members who made little stir in the outside world but whom we all saw daily and all knew by name, as of Centurions of large achievement. EDWARD C. MOORE, Jr., was one of our fellowship to whom, especially after his retirement from affairs, the Century was the greater part of life. He was constantly in the Club-house, often roaming complacently from floor to floor; it seemed to be his home. Nothing was to him more personally gratifying than to give to the Club something worth-while which he thought the Century ought to have. It was from Moore that the present grand piano came which we now use in concerts and recitals; he was the donor of the large and costly world-globe in the Library. How much more satisfying to Moore was the making of the gift than the distinction of having made it, was proved by his habitual stipulation that the Club should be informed that the giver wished to remain anonymous.

Whenever LEONARD LEOPOLD MACKALL made one of his frequent visits to New York from his Savannah home, he always installed himself at the Century. He became a member in 1920, but the impression conveyed to his Club associates —he seemed to know all of them personally— was that he belonged to the Club and had always been a part of it. Fellow-Centurions would encounter him in the office, in the reading-room, in the library, at the southeast corner table in the dining-room. He was everywhere in the Club-house; but anyone who met Mackall would stop to exchange ideas with the Centurion of the serious face but cheerful manner, who himself was always ready to match impressions on whatever subject.

Leonard L.
Mackall

Mackall, however, had one life purpose of his own; the discriminating collection of rare books, concerning which his knowledge was unusual. He knew the pedigree of books published as far back as the Sixteenth Century, not always by well-known writers of the period. He knew where every rare edition of them could be obtained, and had accumulated by his own assiduous effort twelve to fifteen thousand of such volumes. But Mackall was more than a single-minded bibliophile. He knew intimately all the great masters of literature; in American history he was deeply versed. His own state of Georgia had not only made him librarian of the largest Savannah library, but had chosen him for president of the Georgia Historical Society. His extraordinary library is left to Johns Hopkins, but he remembered the Century also, bequeathing it $1,000 for additions to the Club's own library, to be purchased "gradually and carefully." He had, indeed, already enriched our present book-shelves, and perhaps the clearest memory which the Club-house will have of Mackall is of his interested examination of books on the third-floor library table over which he leaned, and his ready suggestion of what others ought to be added.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER was one of those Centurions whose mere presence in a group gave added pleasure to the conversation. He did not himself talk much, but he was the best of listeners, and when he spoke briefly—he was apt to do so—his

William Alexander remarks were always to the point. It was the likable quality of the man himself which made a Club acquaintance feel a sense of restful contentment when, in the reading-room, he dropped into an empty chair beside that in which the fellow-member with the cheerful smile and the long gray beard was installed. Alexander's profession was life insurance, whose principles and history he knew to the farthest detail. But he did not talk shop, unless some Club friend wished to draw on his store of information. Even then, Alexander's quiet observations had to do with human interest, never with technicalities. He had achieved the extraordinary record of serving continuously for sixty-eight years with a single company, and of being regularly elected and re-elected during fifty-eight years as secretary of the Equitable Life. The Equitable's memorial bulletin wrote of him that "for over half a century he was a leader in American life insurance," that he was "strong in his convictions, determined of purpose," yet "never happier than when, with pencil in hand and a child or two at his side, he would illustrate some fanciful tale as he improvised it."

At the Club-house, the pleasant smile and friendly manner with which FRANK HOWELL HOLDEN met fellow-Centurions were an exceedingly familiar picture. Somehow, Holden was apt to be encountered in the first-floor office, either opening the mail from his box or talking with the office staff.

Frank H. Holden This was perhaps continuance of habit contracted when, a decade ago, he served his term on the House committee—that useful and self-sacrificing body, in performing whose duties members take on themselves another business in addition to their own. Holden was always active, in his quiet way, in the interests of the Club, on whose Board of Management and Admissions committee he had periodically occupied a place. He was an architect of some distinction; had long prepared himself abroad and at home for the profession, and had become well known for his notably original planning of large interiors. What most of the Club probably did not know—for Holden never talked about himself—was that he was also an accomplished violinist, who had an important hand in co-operating with De Coppet for introducing to New York the chamber music of our great composers.

Two of the men who made musical criticism a high art in America, whose knowledge of the musical past and judgment of present-day music were no less remarkable than their style of writing, were RICHARD ALDRICH and WILLIAM JAMES HENDERSON. When Henry Krehbiel died, fifteen years ago, Aldrich wrote of the older music critic that "Krehbiel had a place in America which corresponded to that of the great critics of the Nineteenth Century in Europe; a place of commanding influence and authority;" further remarking that "the soundness and discrimination of his judgment were based on profound knowledge of the history of music," but that "this great learning was put at the service of the present," that "he was no historical grubber for the sake of grubbing." Whether the description does or does not in all respects fit Krehbiel, it certainly portrays Aldrich. His background was unquestioned. His criticism was notably fair and kind, but it was just. Much as Aldrich disliked to engage in outright condemnation of a musical performance, he always believed that his readers had a right to know the truth. But his reviews in the Times on such occasions were never bitter or contentious; much less were they characterized by pedantic lecturing or "smart writing"—qualities in which he never indulged.

Aldrich was one of those rare critics whose kindly pointing out of the faults into which singer or pianist or conductor might have fallen was seldom resented; indeed, such reminders often helped the performer's future. Aldrich himself once expressed to a friend his own regret that the exactions imposed on a critic's time, by the multitude of performances at the height of New York's musical season, should have made it impossible for him to imitate Germany's best musical critics of half a century ago, in publishing full and friendly reviews of débutant performances which might have drawn no house and which might themselves have been full of shortcomings, but which nevertheless had promise for the future. Aldrich's next-morning reviews of a musical event suffered like all daily-newspaper articles from the briefness of their span of life before the public. But his amazing knowledge of all episodes in musical history, his imagination mixed with quiet humor, were abundantly displayed in his few published books, which the reader of the future can enjoy. Whoever reads in Aldrich's "Musical Discourse" the chapters on "Shakespeare and Music," "The Beggars' Opera," "Jenny Lind and Barnum," "Folksongs in America" and "Adelina Patti," will find himself delightfully translated into the musical past. But it is the personality of Aldrich the fellow-clubman that the Century will remember. The burly figure with the shock of gray hair, the bristling white moustache, the humorous, kindly eyes, and the interesting conversation which derived added piquancy from his occasional brief stutter, left to the Club-house, where he was a constant visitor, a picture quite its own.

In appearance, mannerism, personality, no one could differ more from Aldrich than WILLIAM JAMES HENDERSON. In musical knowledge and soundness of judgment, no one could resemble him more closely. If anything, it was in its restrained brilliancy of style that Henderson's musical column, especially in the Evening Sun at week-ends when he had passed his eightieth year, stood almost by itself. There was a flavor of James Huneker about it, but the intimate knowledge of past musical episodes, imparted in an absorbingly interesting sketch, was altogether original. Henderson, like Aldrich, knew music and the musical past to the uttermost detail. Like Aldrich, he never scolded but, much more than Aldrich, he was capable of the severest criticism when he thought occasion required it. Regarding the experimental composers of our own time, Henderson frankly did not like them; nevertheless, when their experiments were not pushed to the grotesque, he did them even-handed justice. But he reserved the privilege of writing about them or about musical performers with trenchant irony, sometimes with intentional cruelty—as when he described the much-advertised Marion Talley as “a Chamber of Commerce soprano with a phonograph voice,” and remarked of the singer of the title-rôle in “Iphigenie” that “she seemed a fit subject for the sacrifice.”

Henderson always asserted vigorously that “his job” was “to cover news, not to sit back and write anything that comes into my head.” The contention was evidently directed against music-critics who made their reviews a vehicle for personal hobbies or who, in Talcott Williams’s words, insisted on telling their readers “what a presentation is not, instead of what it is.” But his musical-news-reporter theory scarcely fitted his own charming week-end page. Perhaps that was because “anything that came into his head” was admirably to the point and well worth hearing. But possibly Henderson’s insistence that the news came first arose from another of his claims to newspaper distinction. For an accomplished critic to have won laurels also as yachting expert was most unusual. But Henderson handled the one subject with as thorough knowledge as the other. In conversation, he expressed more pride for his “covering” of the Johnstown flood in 1889 than for his musical distinction. “Billy Henderson,” as his friends always affectionately called him, was well known personally to the Century.

Once more like Aldrich, he had served on the Board of Management and was a frequent afternoon visitor at the Club-house, where those who talked with him will not soon forget the shrewd comment and reminiscence of their old fellow-member with the erect figure, the lean face and the quizzical smile.

FRANK HEINO DAMROSCH's musical achievement was so far overtopped in public distinction by that of his younger brother Walter as to obscure in the minds of many Centurions Frank's real service. Godson of Franz Liszt, for whom he was named, he did not adopt music as a profession until his
Frank twenty-seventh year; even then his first position, Damrosch which he filled for half a dozen years, was only that of Chorus-Master at the Metropolitan Opera House. His first individual achievement was organization of groups of wage-earners into the People's Choral Union; he conducted it for twenty-one years at Cooper Union. About the same time he formed the Musical Art Society, composed of trained singers who for more than twenty years gave New York music-lovers opportunity of hearing, for the first time, adequate performances of the great masters of Capella choral writing, from Palestrina to Brahms. During several years he acted as Director of Music in the public schools, and greatly raised their musical standards. Succeeding his brother Walter, he conducted the Young People's Concerts and for many years the New York Oratorio Society. Perhaps his crowning achievement was his establishment in 1905 of the Institute of Musical Art, with a faculty of unprecedented distinction, into which he brought such artists as the Kneisel Quartet performers, Etelka Gerster, and Georg Henschel. It marked a new era for musical education in America. Until his retirement because of failing health in 1933, Damrosch had served New York half a century in promoting its musical art and culture. Always frail physically, he was nevertheless an intrepid mountaineer; also an enthusiastic navigator of sail-boats during his holidays at Seal Harbor.

Until the New Theatre was established in 1909, at Sixty-second Street and Central Park West, New York had little personal acquaintance with WINTHROP AMES. For three years, however, he had conducted with notable success dramatic presentations at the Castle Square in Boston and, when the New Theatre was ready, its promoters summoned Ames to manage it. Their theatrical enterprise was ambitious. Some of its founders had correct ideas regarding the city's need of a home for new and high-grade drama; most of them, unfortunately, were possessed with the infatuation that, since the booming prosperity of 1901 and 1906 was certain to last forever, no limit need be set to the money poured into it. Otto Kahn, one of the founders and himself no niggardly estimator of first costs, used to say in private that the extravagant notions forced into plans for the new undertaking—he specified Heinrich Conried and Charles T. Barney as particularly subject to delusion—were such as to make him shiver. What was worse, it soon became evident that, in every step of the New Theatre's construction, blunders had been made. It was placed at one of the least favorable spots in the middle city, where approach to the theatre door by vehicle—or, for that matter, on foot—was difficult. The first performance revealed acoustics so defective that some orchestra seats had to endure an echo, while occupants of others could not hear at all. To make disappointment complete, lapse of a few years disclosed the shoddiness of material used for halls and foyer, so that the surface of imitation marble steps was visibly scaling off.

Winthrop

The New Theatre (better known afterward as The Century) was in fact doomed from the start; an apartment house now occupies its site. None of the blame attached to Winthrop Ames; he made a gallant fight to save the enterprise. Some of the plays produced by him in his two-year management were notably staged and acted. To New Yorkers, many were brilliant novelties. Older theatre-goers will remember especially his presentation on Central Park West of Galsworthy's "Strife," Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird," Pinero's "Thunderbolt" and Shakespeare's "Winter's Tale." But admission prices had to be kept high; the 2500 seats were rarely filled. These legacies from ill-judged planning made the enterprise distasteful to Winthrop Ames. When his two-year contract expired, he willingly relinquished his responsibilities. As if to show his own aversion to the New-Theatre ideas, he proceeded at once to build and manage for himself the Little Theatre on Forty-fourth Street and the Booth on Forty-fifth. The result was a distinctive chapter in our theatrical history. Presenting his plays to small audiences—which, however, always filled the house—with moderate admission fees and without “star actors,” Ames nevertheless lavished on his stage setting and his costumes a wealth of imagination, supplemented by thorough and sympathetic training of the cast, which made his performances nearly perfect. “The Green Goddess,” “Old English,” “The Great Adventure,” not to mention the Gilbert-and-Sullivan reproductions to which he constantly returned, will always by this generation be associated with his little theatres.

Even when most immersed in productive work, Winthrop Ames was genial in manner and conversation. His cast, which idolized him, always recalled the joy of those rehearsals which are so often a source of heart-burnings. That just such a personality, in just such an occupation, should have risen from his family antecedents, was a familiar and often-recurring puzzle. Winthrop Ames was lineal descendant of the Oakes Ames of Union Pacific celebrity. His family background was manufacture of shovels. He was himself a man of wealth, which he always placed at the disposal of his theatrical undertakings.

Those of us who, forty or fifty years ago, used to read with excitement and delight Conan Doyle’s newly-published “Sherlock Holmes”—and that means practically all of us who were then able to read—will agree that it was the story, the ingenious outlining and unraveling of the plot, which most appealed to imagination. Except in so far as the author described his leading characters as lean or portly, tall or short, the physical picture even of Sherlock

Gillette

Holmes was not definite. On the stage of the later Nineties, this lack was soon supplied. WILLIAM GILLETTE instantly made the personality of the psychological detective, his mannerism, voice, gesture, his slow then quickened step, the lazy puffing at his cigar, as familiar to whoever was lucky enough to see him on the stage as were intimate personalities in real life. At critical junctures in the plot, Gillette possessed in uncommon measure the art, not shared by many stage celebrities, of holding his audience in breathless suspense merely by standing motionless and saying nothing, but with the tense excitement of the moment written on his sharp, self-possessed face and rigid figure, or communicated to the excited listener by something like telepathy. What sudden misgiving, plan, expedient was passing through the brain of the silent figure on the stage, his audience knew instantly.

Gillette was so well aware of the dramatic incidents essential to display of these qualities, of what dialogue should best precede and follow, that he usually wrote his own plays. When Bronson Howard's success with "Shenandoah" in 1889 had aroused the theatre-going public's interest in Civil War dramas, Gillette took a hand with his "Held by the Enemy" and "Secret Service." Both were his compositions; both were tensely interesting. Even at this distance of time, people that saw them will remember how the resourceful Union spy who held the centre of the stage was an exact foreshadowing of Gillette's Sherlock Holmes, not least in the moments of crisis when the spy, alone and silent in the military Confederate telegraph-room, listened to the clicking instrument and tapped it in his turn, and when the discoveries which must have been made by him raced through the audience's mind. Gillette had been a fellow member of our own for eleven years. He did not come often to the Club-house, but his conversation was as entertaining as that of the other master-actors on our roll, and his background was as varied as theirs. When it is recalled that he had seen sixty years of active service on the stage, yet that his was a New England family and that his father had been United States Senator from Connecticut, one surely gets a glimpse of the varied panorama of American achievement.

The Club-house did not often see EDWIN BURRAGE CHILD. For ten years he had made his home in Dorset, Vermont, where most of his artistic work was done and with which town he was identified, both in its civic affairs and in the local scenery which

Edwin B. Child he painted. He was in fact quite as interested in restoring or remodeling old Dorset houses in the Colonial style as in pursuit of his own art; even his residence and studio were reconstructed out of two picturesque Dorset barns of another day. Nevertheless as landscape and portrait painter, and during a considerable period as illustrator for the monthly magazines, Child won something of nation-wide distinction. His landscapes were pleasing, more perhaps for their insight into hidden beauties of the scene than for imagination. His portraits depicted, among other notabilities, his fellow-Centurions Dwight Morrow, Lyman Abbott, and John Bassett Moore; they hang on the walls of numerous public and educational institutions. On the wall of our own rear billiard-room hangs one of Child's best impromptu paintings—the exceedingly lifelike picture of our well-remembered fellow-Centurion, Francis Stoddard, with his cue about to make a master-stroke. One of his last canvases was the portrait of Henry T. Rainey—like Child, an Amherst graduate. Child was not in college during Rainey's time; if he had been, he might have supplemented his painting of the potent, grave and reverend Speaker of the House with a picture of the prospective statesman as his Class of '83 remembers him, clad in extremely tenuous garments, ready for a boxing-bout, and looking with supercilious defiance at all comers.

During forty-five years, ALEXANDER SHILLING had painted his pictures in the same New York studio. Landscapes were his special artistic achievement; frequently those of his ancestral Holland, in which country many of his paintings have found their final home. Shilling, whose work won distinguished medals for both painting and etching, was one of those born artists who was determined from the first to enter on his predestined work. He did so, after a trying period of service in the retail dry-goods trade, by apprenticing himself at the age of 18 to a Chicago local painter. The work of the neophyte soon overtopped that of the master.

HERMAN T. SCHLADERMUNDT was a versatile artist, with particular bent for interior mural and stained-glass decoration, to supplement the exterior designs by our most distinguished architects. His work comprised mosaics and stained glass in the National Library at Washington, in the

H. T. Schladermundt Agricultural Building at Chicago's World's Fair of 1893, at the Essex County Courthouse in Newark, and at the Flagler Memorial in St. Augustine. In all of these noteworthy buildings, Schladermundt's fine sense of color and appropriate design gave distinction to the interiors.

William H. Hart WILLIAM HOWARD HART began his artistic career by studying at the Art Students' League with J. Alden Weir, and at the Academie Julian in Paris. His paintings were exhibited in American academies; his interest extended into interior decorations.

Frederick Richardson During a full generation painter, illustrator and art instructor, FREDERICK RICHARDSON lived out a full and congenial career. His fifteen-year service on the art staff of the Chicago Daily News was not determined, as in those older days it often was, by "smart drawing" and artistic persiflage; Richardson had acquired his knowledge of the craft at the Academie Julian in Paris, had been pupil of some of the best French masters. Perhaps he will be chiefly remembered for his "Book of Drawings," comprising his best illustrations for the monthly magazines and children's books.

Those Centurions who sat next to JOHN RUSSELL POPE, or across the lunch or dinner table from that good-humored and easy conversationalist, were not always aware how brilliantly constructive an architect they had been talking with. Pope was a disciple of McKim, but his development of large-scale conceptions in the planning of public and private buildings was altogether original. From first to last, he held unswervingly to the ideals of the great artistic past, but he managed to infuse into his work imagination, artistic conceptions, of his own.

Like all architects of genius, Pope will be allotted his place in artistic history through the enduring edifices which bear his name as designer. The dignified Archives Building and Scottish Rite Temple at Washington; the Theodore Roosevelt Memorial in this city; the Montfaucon War Memorial in France; the extension in which the British Museum is to house the Elgin marbles and, not least, his last constructive work, the designing for Ex-Secretary Mellon of the gallery of art which, at Washington, is to shelter for the American people Mellon's artistic gifts to them—all this sums up an enduring life-story. But it is perfectly safe to prophesy that the Century will remember John Pope far less for what he did than for what, in genial Club-house companionship, he individually was.

The Century had long been familiar with the serious face and downright conversation of WILLIAM ALCIPHON BORING. For many years, during which he was a constant visitor at 7 West 43rd Street, he was one of those personalities that seemed to belong to the Club. Boring was an architect of industry, taste and judgment. He had been member of the first United States Council of Fine Arts, President of the New York Architectural League and one of the founders of the Beaux Arts Institute of Design. Medals for achievement in his craft were showered on him by the Buffalo and St. Louis expositions and by the Paris exposition of 1900. But perhaps the distinction which meant most to Boring was his appointment in 1915 as Columbia's professor of architecture and head of the architectural faculty. To the progress of that branch of collegiate education, he was in many respects the chief contributor.

NORMAN HAPGOOD, like most of the rest of us in the Eighties and Nineties, broke into journalism through the avenue of the "space reporter." He reported city news for the old Evening Post in Godkin's palmy days, and he quickly made his mark. That was not because he received personal commendation from the editor-in-chief; for E. L. Godkin, with all his high journalistic qualities, had the very bad habit of never going out of his way to notice work of the news-reporting staff, except when it did not suit him. But when Hapgood wrote for his afternoon paper a two or three column story of the day's important but highly intricate argument before the Interstate Commerce Commission, Joseph H. Choate and James C. Carter made it their business to write personally to the Evening Post, concerning the remarkable clarity with which the unknown reporter had narrated the proceedings and had set forth the underlying principles. It was with this same thoroughness that Hapgood did everything; perhaps that was why, later on, his five years on other newspapers as dramatic critic made no great impression. He lacked that light touch which enlivens criticism of the kind.

Like his mode of thought, Hapgood's style was downright and uncompromising. When he began to write editorials, he was quite inevitably drawn into political discussion. On such topics, he was always a liberal thinker; in those days many people described him as a dangerous radical. He made mistakes, sometimes took positions which he himself found to be untenable; but he was moderate in language, he was always ready to admit the fact when he had been wrong, and he was separated by many leagues from the traditional Braintruster of 1933.

Hapgood had a hand, quite inevitably, in New York City politics, notably in the Fusion committee which elected John Purroy Mitchel mayor. In all such matters, he often differed from acquaintances both on the Right and on the Left, but never with contentious indignation. To the most convinced opponent of his political ideas, he would talk with quiet and inquiring interest. In one of Hapgood's editorial invectives, he quoted the saying of an older philosopher: "I abhor your opinion, but I would give my life to defend your right to express it."

PAUL ELMER MORE frequently joined the groups at the lunch-table or the older-time Graham Library, and this sociable participation in Club-house gatherings continued after his residence had changed from New York to Princeton. In his household writing, More was absorbed for many years with his "Shelburne Essays," which ranged widely through the topics of philosophy, literature and religion, and which won him wide repute as scholar in all those fields. Probably older fellow-Centurions will remember him still better for his literary editorship; first on the Independent, then, in succession to the late Wendell P. Garrison and Hammond Lamont, on the old Nation. In the conducting of those publications, More's own literary judgment was not more infallible than the instinct for discovering promising qualities with which he chose new contributors and reviewers—some of whom, like our late fellow-Centurion Stuart Sherman, he brought from comparative obscurity to high achievement in literary criticism. But at the same time, More was never blind to shortcomings of critics with established reputation. To Saintsbury, for instance, he usually referred as a critic pleasant in style and learned in past and contemporary literature, but who, either through carelessness or laziness, would rarely quote correctly even the best-known literary passages.

It would be difficult to recall many dwellers in this city who have been more respected and beloved than MORGAN JOSEPH O'BRIEN. He had a talent for friendship; his social gifts were based on a sympathetic and indulgent outlook. Up to the last, his sense of humor never failed him; all who knew him well will remember the rollicking fun of his genial conversation. He was one of the very early golf players, and in the first years of the Shinnecock Golf Club he was a popular figure. Annually, he gave a luncheon to all members of the Club, including a number of people prominent in New York life. O'Brien described those occasions as "Harvest Home Luncheons." He was usually called upon to sing, in a rather weak tenor voice, various humorous songs, probably composed by himself.

But Judge O'Brien's part in his community extended also to every phase of civic activity—to charities, to education, to religion, and to the uplifting of the unfortunate. Born in this city twenty years after his father had left Ireland, O'Brien was brought up in an atmosphere of sympathy for Ireland in her troubles; he himself inherited some of the most lovable qualities of the race. After a brief but active practice at the bar he was appointed by Mayor Hewitt as Corporation Counsel, but held that office only for a brief period until he was elected Justice of the Supreme Court at the early age of thirty-six. He was the youngest man ever chosen to that important office. As Judge, he exemplified the quality which suffused a spirit of informality, without abating at all the maintenance of dignity and order. In performance of his judicial functions he was industrious and fair; he had the gift of applying to questions, both of law and fact, a common sense which avoided circuitous or subtle methods of approach. As Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the First Department, he made high reputation for maintaining the dignity of the court while inspiring confidence, among lawyers and litigants, that their cases would be carefully considered. He had that most valuable quality in a presiding judge, the tact and sense of fairness which was often able to compose seemingly irreconcilable differences among the members of the court.

Both in mind and manner, AUSTEN GEORGE FOX had a personality quite his own. A loyal and devoted son of Harvard, he clung closely to his early academic associations and relationships to the very end of his life. He had a powerful and richly-furnished mind, was widely-read and had great command of language. He went through life with the most amazing nonchalance. He quickly rose to a position at the bar where he commanded high fees; then comfortably formed the habit of doing only what he wanted to do and when he wanted to do it. From one point of view, his life was a lazy one. From another viewpoint, it was a life of very carefully selected occupations and opportunities. He was a brilliant and often amusing conversationalist, with a tendency to sarcasm, and took part in all sorts of interesting forms of public service.

An eminent corporation lawyer, partner of his fellow-Centurions John W. Davis and Frank L. Polk, LANSING REED was a man of widely-varied interests. His reputation, it was written of him half a dozen years ago, "is of the old-fashioned sort; his judgment is valued, not merely because it takes the form of an expertly drawn and brilliantly conceived legal opinion, but because it is his." But Lansing Reed had also his other side. He was not only, in line with familiar present-day avocations, an ardent golfer, fisherman and stamp collector, but a constant worker for the higher things of life. He was a man, one of his friends has testified, who took his religion very seriously. He was director of the Union Theological Seminary, member of the Session of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, Chairman of the Advisory Board of Dwight Hall in New Haven, and to each position he gave time and thought in unstinted measure. He had, moreover, a rare faculty for friendship which endeared him to all who came into contact with him.

Colonel HOWARD THAYER KINGSBURY was described by those who knew him best as a most delightful, agreeable and cultivated gentleman, to whom applied individually the classic aphorism that nothing of human interest and culture was alien to him. Colonel Kingsbury, of old and distinguished New England ancestry, was admitted to the New York bar forty-four years ago; he quickly won his spurs in the profession. How widely his own varied field of interest extended was shown by his conducting of important cases before the United States Supreme Court, his active participation in the work of the International Law Association, his service as counsel for the British government in the World War, his presidency of the village where he made his summer home, his fifteen-year service as Judge Advocate of the New York State National Guard and his helpfulness in raising the standard of the American theatre. It was Kingsbury who translated for Richard Mansfield the acting text of Rostand's "Cyrano."

FREDERICK HOBBS ALLEN, who often sat at the Century's long table in the luncheon hour, was fond of tracing his direct descent from an Allen who, having served with Cromwell's "Ironsides," emigrated to colonial America when the English picture changed at the Restoration. Our Allen was not an Ironside, but he organized the first American aviation unit when we entered the World War, emerged from that conflict as lieutenant-commander, and served with Colonel House on the Peace commission. In what may be called his private life, Colonel Allen was a practicing lawyer in this city. At four Democratic national conventions he was a delegate.

HENRY ELSWORTH GREGORY, who had retired from active law practice in New York several years ago, was active in his prime in the field of civic service. He was for years a manager of the State Reservation at Niagara, was closely identified with numerous philanthropic interests, and had made many public addresses on political and legal problems.

WILLIAM SAMUEL JOHNSON came of distinguished ancestry; one of his direct-line progenitors was the William Samuel Johnson who did service in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 and became chairman of its Committee on Style—a committee which our present-day lawmakers and
W. S. Johnson constitution-makers would do well to reinstate. Though an active lawyer, Johnson was author also; some of his poems, novels, and political articles went into wide circulation.

There have been men, in and out of Century membership, whose own personality or achievement was overshadowed by that belonging to their father. EUSTACE CONWAY was perhaps one of them, yet he himself will be remembered by his friends Eustace Conway for what he accomplished individually. His father, Moncure D. Conway, was an erratic and brilliant fellow-Centurion of ours a generation ago who fought the battles of the Civil War and afterward, not at the front but with the equally powerful initiative of his incisive platform speech and pen. His conversation was a tradition of the Century. He had been, so Professor Sloane recalled in the Club memorials for 1907, "editor, exhorter, preacher, author, lecturer, traveler and reformer;" he had "the charm of originality, a grace of manner that won friends, and a sense of finality which perpetuated interest in his personality."

It was not easy for the son to duplicate such qualities, and Eustace Conway did not try to do so. In social intercourse he was agreeable, but as a rule retiring. Practicing lawyer during half a century, Conway applied himself to the avocations of collecting rare manuscripts and investigating from all accessible material the story of Shakespeare and his period. On this subject he was an acknowledged expert; he published a book upon it, but only for private circulation. One of Conway's pleasing reminiscences was of the personality and mannerisms of Charles Dickens; whom, as a friend of his father's, he met pretty intimately. Like many other Dickens admirers, Eustace Conway took a hand at solving Dickens' uncompleted "Mystery of Edwin Drood."

Although surgery was his chosen profession, ROBERT BATTEY GREENOUGH was the son of one author of the "Allen-and-Greenough Latin grammar" which so many schoolboys used to curse, and he always retained some of the school-master qualities of his father. But his personal charm was great; he had much common sense, many original ideas, and did a good deal for Boston in the way of shaping intellectual movements, mostly of a professional nature. Greenough was an active surgeon, but surgery was never to him the dominant part of life. He liked to write, and wrote well. He was a popular member of old Boston clubs, such as the St. Botolph, where he joined fellow-members in talk about fishing and whatever else interested him.

JOHN WYCKOFF's career as medical educator was as brilliant and useful as it was brief. Only thirty-five years ago he entered New York University as student of medicine, became one of its instructors soon after graduation, Secretary of the medical faculty in 1917, dean of the Medical college and full professor fifteen years afterward. In all these positions he won distinction. The Chancellor of the University declared of him that, under his energetic guidance, "leading departments of the medical college were reorganized and an outstanding faculty developed," that "the plant of the school was conspicuously revamped and enlarged." "Ordinary terms," the Chancellor concluded, "fail to convey the high estimation in which he was held."

JAMES RAMSAY HUNT had an international reputation for knowledge of the physiology and medical aspects of the nervous system. His keen clinical observation brought to light several conditions previously unrecognized. His colleagues in that branch of medical science testify that his researches on "paralysis agitans" did much to reveal the structure and function of the basal ganglia of the brain; about which, before his work, little was known. He was unassuming, a man of great natural dignity yet whimsical humor. His great stature, the slow rhythm of his movements and the always-present mien of dignity led one of his professional friends to sum up his physical aspect as Olympian. In his personality and life work there was fine distinction.

LAWRANSON BROWN has been called a pioneer in modern treatment of tuberculosis. In his chosen field he was both a tireless research worker and a practical administrator. During twelve years he was head of the medical department of Dr. Trudeau's Saranac Sanatorium. Trudeau Lawranson himself once wrote of Dr. Brown that the insti-

Brown tution's "efficient rule of discipline," its thorough instruction, not only of nurses but of patients, its "exhaustive post-discharge records of all patients," and its laboratory work, "all sprang into life as a result of Dr. Brown's consistent efforts."

GEORGE FREDERICK CLOVER had been connected with St. Luke's Hospital for forty-five years and had been pastor and superintendent of it since 1901. He had become nationally known in the medical world for his executive ability and per-George F. sonal charm, through which he combined in the Clover hospital the highest standard of professional service with a very uncommon spiritual atmosphere. Dr. Clover was also Canon of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine; his career linked closely the religious and medical problems of life.

An out-of-town member of the Club and acting president of Hartford Seminary, MELANCTHON WILLIAMS JACOBUS had pursued during forty years the profession of theological education. He had studied at Göttingen and Berlin, long before
M. W. the German university became, under Hitler's ré-Jacobus gime of superstition, intolerance and fanaticism, a laughing-stock for the educated world—a contemporary spectacle which, in his later years as teacher of New Testament exegesis, gave a melancholy touch to Dr. Jacobus's reminiscence. But his own work as lecturer at Princeton, Mount Holyoke and Hartford, as author of theological commentaries, and as collaborator in his chosen field on the Standard Dictionary, made its impress on American religious thought.

All of the engineering experts who came to New York soon encountered the pleasant personality of ALFRED DOUGLAS FLINN. He was for many years secretary and executive officer of the Joint Organization of Engineering Societies, the duties of which position brought him in frequent contact with the large engineering projects of the day and with the promising younger engineers.

Alfred D. Flinn When he became Deputy Chief Engineer of the New York City Board of Water Supply—which built, during his connection with it, the Catskill Aqueduct, the Ashokan and Kensico dams, and in whose constructive work $140,000,000 was expended by the City—it was said that Flinn not only recruited the hundreds of engineers enlisted in the undertaking, but personally interviewed the applicants when they had passed the Civil Service tests. This was not all; the exacting duties of his office covered the obtaining of structures and equipment; preparation of contracts, estimates of cost, writing of special and annual reports; inspection of manufactured materials; selecting of consulting architects and co-operation with them; co-operation with general and special consulting engineers, geologists, landscape engineers, sanitation specialists, and, during the war, military organizations guarding the water-works; establishment and management of a special laboratory for research and testing of materials. But Flinn did this arduous work effectively, and he found time for frequent visits to the Century.

Clement March CLEMENT MARCH did public service under Mayor McClellan on the Board of Education and on the board of managers for the city's House of Refuge at Randall's Island. In the European war, he was useful in the Department of Military Intelligence, translating for his chief the communications and newspaper editorials in the Spanish and Portuguese languages.

William F. Decker WILLIAM F. DECKER'S business career was identified with piano-manufacture. At Greenwich, Connecticut, where he was a well-known resident, he was active in the community's civic interests.

Chas. B. Rogers CHARLES BUTLER ROGERS had for eighteen years been non-resident member of the Club. During all of his active business life, he worked with the same bank; becoming also one of the best-known citizens of Utica, where he served for many years as director in numerous corporations and as trustee and treasurer of Hamilton College.

ALEXANDER BLAIR THAW was a quiet and unassuming Centurion, whose bent was toward occasional poetic writing. He had traveled widely, and had in recent years resided mostly at Washington or on the European continent.

Though resident of Amherst, GEORGE MEASON WHICHER was a frequent visitor at the Century, where his gentle face and quiet conversation gave a pleasant touch to Club-house exchange of views. Before his retirement in 1924, Whicher had for many years taught Greek and Latin at George M. Packer and Hunter colleges. He believed, along with most people who have read such literature intelligently, that study of the ancient classics was indispensable, not only for the imparting of culture to the undergraduate, but for teaching prospective writers how the proper order of words and phrases could save their English from a succession of subordinate clauses dangled at the end of sentences—the practice by which our written language is so constantly disfigured. It was the testimony of Dr. Whicher's pupils that his teaching never made Greek or Latin a collection of dry rules of grammar, but, as one of them described it, "an adventure" in which they felt, with Keats,

"Like some watcher of the skies
When a new planet swims into his ken."

Dr. Whicher's poetry, of which he wrote much, was perhaps not notable. But it was pleasing and graceful; it was like himself.

That JOHN ALBERT COUSENS was one of our great educators was testified, last summer, not only by Tufts College, of which for seventeen years he had been president, but by executives in some of our most important institutions of learning.

John A. Cousens He was not a life-long educator. On the contrary, during the twenty-two years after his graduation from Tufts, he had been head of an important coal company, of a savings bank and of the Board of Trade in his native Massachusetts town. But early in his business career he was drafted into the trustee's board of Tufts, and by general consent of faculty and alumni became its president in 1920. Dr. Cousens possessed a strong individuality, keen insight into the financial problems of a college, but along with this, the most positive convictions on the principles of higher education. His opinion always was that the student should be taught, not so much what would be useful and convenient in the pursuits of after-life as what would lay the groundwork for intelligent judgment on the problems of the day. "To develop the art of living," Dr. Cousens once declared, "should be the object of all education," and "the art of living"—the greatest of all arts, he thought—"must be determined by learning the relations of human values."

of-town members who rarely visited New York, yet whose membership in the Century was to him a source of pride which led him never to relinquish it, even when he was in his eighties.

Charles F. Thwing Himself a Harvard man, he followed during his Presidency of Western Reserve the Charles W. Eliot tradition. His contribution to American higher education was substantial; it lay first in his omnivorous reading; second, in his ability to digest what he read; third, in the facility with which he presented the result in clear and simple form. At the time of his death, he had no fewer than thirty-five educational volumes to his credit.

A. V. W. Jackson A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON was an outstanding scholar in what we nowadays look upon as a remote field of knowledge—the languages, literatures, religions and institutions of the Indo-Iranian peoples, particularly those of Persia. He spent fully fifty years at work in this field, and cultivated it in so extraordinary a fashion that in Persia itself, to say nothing of Europe and America, he was considered a foremost authority. When he went to Bombay or to Teheran, he was hailed and treated as a high visiting celebrity would have been. After the War he was received by the King of England, in order that Jackson might give in person what everyone looked upon as the most authoritative report on what was going on behind the scenes in India and Persia.

Jackson was as modest as he was learned. He never advertised to the general public the mass of his learning. He combined with his scholarship great charm of manner and fine teaching power. All those who were his students at any time during the half-century worshipped him. One of his college associates recalls that the Class-day historian of Commencement week at Columbia foreshadowed Jackson's career in the poetic tribute that

"Abraham Valentine Williams Jackson
Is the only man who ever got 'max' on Latin and Greek and accursed Anglo-Saxon."

ROBERT WORTH BINGHAM, who died in the service as American ambassador at the Court of St. James's, had been a non-resident member of the Century for only six years, and rarely if ever visited the Club. He bought the Louisville Courier-Journal in 1918, and conducted it thereafter with success as a journalistic enterprise, though hardly with the pungent editorial force of Henry Watterson. His appointment as ambassador was one of the early selections of President Franklin Roosevelt to our foreign service, and Bingham commended himself to the British people, chiefly because of his constant advocacy of "whole-hearted concerted action" between the United States and the British Empire, as the "foundation of hope for our world."

In the Treasury at Washington, during the days when the nation was confronted, first with the wildest speculative mania in its history, then by the most formidable of financial depressions, OGDEN LIVINGSTON MILLS was an outstanding figure.

Ogden L. Mills Although Mills did not often visit the Club-house, the fact that he and his chief, Andrew W. Mellon, were fellow-members of the Century until Mellon's retirement in 1932, gave the Club a pleasant personal interest in both careers. Mellon was Treasury Secretary in the eleven years from March, 1921, to February, 1932—the longest Treasury term but one in the history of our country. The high esteem won for him by his useful public service may have been a reason for the hounding of Mellon, after his retirement from public life, by the present absurd Department of Justice of another party. It is not true that Mellon encouraged the crazy speculation of 1928 and 1929. He voted unsuccessfully for restraint of it by high Reserve bank rates, and declared in his Treasury report of December, 1928, that the wild rise in stocks was "partly due to activities of a powerful group of speculators, partly to the fact that the public in general believed and acted as if the price of securities would advance indefinitely." But it is true that, during Mellon's term of office, the tax system was reorganized and the public debt reduced eight billion dollars—which suggests comparisons.

In effecting the large-scale debt-reduction after March, 1927, Ogden Mills as under-secretary was Mellon's chief reliance. He grappled resolutely with the crumbling revenues after 1929; then, on Mellon's retirement in February, 1932, when Mills himself became Secretary of the Treasury, he took on his shoulders the full and all but crushing burden of public finance in depression time. There is reason to believe that he personally advocated in January, 1933, when the "bank panic" was beginning, the nation-wide bank holiday and bank rehabilitation which Roosevelt put into force the ensuing March. But a task of the sort was impracticable for an administration which, defeated at the polls, would in five or six weeks relinquish office. Mills himself was a clear thinker, a tireless worker, a pleasant companion. Before and after March 4, 1933, he steadfastly advocated maintenance unimpaired of the existing gold standard. In his occasional public speeches after retirement to private life, while always observing controversial courtesy, Mills denounced the government's deliberate depreciation of the dollar, its succession of conflicting experiments and, particularly, its monstrous heaping-up of public debt in time of peace. The time will some day come when this kind of judgment on fiscal questions, and this kind of statesman to put it in effect, will again be at the American people's service.

In one important regard the Washington career of NEWTON DIEHL BAKER, and his attitude towards the European War, personified the American position. His steadfast opposition to our joining the struggle until Germany made maintenance of peace impossible was followed, when we had gone to war, by vigorous, judicious and entirely successful conducting of the War Department. It is true that a large body of Eastern Americans, headed by Theodore Roosevelt and not at all voiceless in the Century, insisted from the start that we ought to fight Germany at once. But the West thought differently. It will be remembered that our own late fellow-Centurion, Melville Stone, in touch with nation-wide public sentiment through his chieftainship of the Associated Press, replied to an inquiry of President Wilson in 1916 that a Congressional majority could certainly not then be obtained for declaration of war. Baker's judgment, when appointed Secretary of War in March, 1916, reflected the Western feeling. Like Wilson, he saw further than many other Americans into our own economic, social and political future if the United States were to enter the European war; furthermore, he held strictly to his own pre-war principle that the duty of right-minded citizens was to help in abolishing war. During the thirteen months of his official term before April, 1917, he was denounced as "pacifist" by Americans who differed with him.

Baker

But when the rapid drift of circumstance had brought us into war and the problem confronted government as to how the exacting task should be performed, Baker became immediately one of the great war ministers. Nowadays, he is occasionally described as the most eminent war-time American chief of the Department. That, in itself, is faint praise. Secretary Alger in our Spanish War of 1898 is remembered mainly for mismanagement and waste. Secretary Marcy in the Mexican War was perpetually quarreling with his generals. The two war Secretaries during our War of 1812, Eustis and Armstrong, were both in after history associated with bad judgment, administrative blunders and futile plans. Even Stanton in the Civil War, with all his immense energy of the Lloyd-George sort, interfered constantly in military campaigns and, in his relations with commanders, roused bitter enmity.

Nothing of this marked Secretary Baker's war-time career. He planned the expeditionary force, sustained the draft, accomplished with the utmost tact the selection of our generals. He did this when partisans of Theodore Roosevelt and Leonard Wood were angrily trying to force his hand. Recognizing, as his best military advisers did, that the political affiliations of those candidates were an insuperable barrier to service in high command at such a crisis, Baker passed them over, quietly organized the staff—with what results, we know—and faced such political clamor as ensued. In the problems of constructing training-camps, of obtaining and concentrating the immense supplies required, not to mention that of shipping the millions of soldiers across the Atlantic and providing for their maintenance abroad—in all these matters, Baker had brilliant assistance from his department aides. But the full responsibility rested personally on the small, slender, quiet-spoken chief in the building next the White House. Few civilian war executives could have so thoroughly effaced, as Baker did in his personal war-time visit to the front, everything in the way of ceremonial or ovation. Fewer, perhaps, could have stepped back as unostentatiously as he into private life, when his official term was ended. With Baker, the highest of all ambitions was to be a useful citizen.

In the Club-house reading-room of an afternoon, ROLLO OGDEN had long been a familiar figure. Usually, he was immersed in one of the London monthly or quarterly reviews ; indeed, his interest in the parliamentary vicissitudes of England or the Continent belonged to one who was best-informed of all American editors on Europe's political past. With the political history of his own country he was even better acquainted; an extraordinarily tenacious memory enabled him to reply at once, with all the names and dates and circumstances, to inquiry concerning an obscure or forgotten incident. There is a saying in newspaper offices that it is easy to obtain the exact facts of an episode which happened half a century ago, not very hard to unearth them when they are twenty-five years behind us, but extremely difficult to run them down when they occurred last year, and almost impossible to reconstruct on short notice the precise order of events of two or three months ago. But Ogden could give the facts off-hand and in full detail.

Development of Ogden's high editorial efficiency came to him on the old Evening Post of Godkin's day. Before he joined that staff in 1891, he had written for the affiliated Nation, largely on social and literary topics. It was only gradually that he came to share in writing the "political leaders," but his grasp of the subject and his forceful style soon made them noteworthy. When, after the turn of the century, he succeeded Horace White and E. L. Godkin as editor-in-chief of the Evening Post, the brilliant chapter of his career began. In 1920, when the Times required an associate editor who should be Charles R. Miller's lieutenant and eventual successor, the choice fell unhesitatingly on Ogden.

Like most of the older-school editors, Ogden preferred to write his articles by hand. But he also possessed in very uncommon measure the faculty of dictating his editorial matter to a short-hand secretary, without impairment either of style, compactness, or precision. He often had to adopt this recourse; for it became a byword of his Evening Post staff that, whenever contributions of his colleagues were not numerous enough to fill the editorial page or not varied enough in topic to suit his editorial judgment, Ogden would supplement his leading article with one or two others of his own; discussing, in his own incisive manner and with his own fulness of information, wholly different questions. He could frame such dictated editorials to exactly the length required—a column, half a column, a quarter-column—and could do so without cutting or expanding the typed manuscript which resulted. When, during his last year or two of life, his sight became so impaired that he could no longer see to read or write, Ogden continued to provide for the Times its leading editorials. This astonishing achievement was made possible, first by listening while his secretary read to him all of the morning newspaper, then by arranging in his mind the facts and treatment which the editorial required, and finally by dictating it, at precisely the scope and length desired.

Somewhat reticent in speech, not possessing many intimates, nevertheless the friendliness of Ogden's manner and his easy conversation won him not only the complete loyalty of his editorial associates, but the cordial regard of whoever met him. Exacting as was his editorial task, he never lost his liking for out-of-door life. In his college days, he pitched for the Williams nine. Almost up to the last, his repute on the golf-links was unchallenged.

The high place occupied by ELIHU ROOT, not only in his profession and in the conducting of public institutions but in the national government at Washington, was forcefully described at the Century's memorial meeting last April. The speeches on that occasion by Dr. Butler and Colonel Elihu Root Stimson, the letter from Mr. Newton Baker, testified to what Root's army reorganization meant in our subsequent effort during war, and to the deep impression made on our foreign relations by his three-and-a-half years as Secretary of State under Theodore Roosevelt. It was recalled also how our national legislation was affected when he served for six years as United States Senator from New York; our state and civic framework when he sat in the New York State Constitutional Convention, and the nation's view of its own fundamental problems when, advanced in years and retired from public activities, Root talked or wrote as an Elder Statesman to whom everybody listened.

All this the Century knew. In it, the Club of which he was for ten years President took individual pride. Yet the picture of Root which his fellow-members will retain is not primarily that of diplomatist and statesman, but of an intimate Club associate who was always in the chair at monthly meetings and who invariably lent to the occasion an atmosphere of mingled efficiency, dignity and humor. President Cortissoz, speaking at the April memorial gathering, touched on these qualities. He properly recalled Root's response to Wickersham, who had asked him how, with his multifarious engagements, he managed always to be present at scheduled monthly meetings of the Club or its Managing Board. Root quietly replied that, when he was elected President of the Century, he reserved to the Club, in his memorandum-book for a coming year, every date on which either of those occasions fell. He remarked, as even the punctilious Wickersham somewhat wonderingly recalled, that the question arising when named for such an office was not whether to accept it as a distinction requiring only actual service if convenient, but whether to accept at all unless the way was clear for performing every duty of the place and being present at every stipulated date. That Root was exceptionally equipped as chairman of a meeting, great or small, every one knew from his political achievement—notably his conducting of the tumultuous Republican National Convention in 1912. But no Centurion will have forgotten the quickness with which the Club's monthly business was dispatched by him or, particularly, the Chairman's handling of Club discussion. Necessarily, many of the speakers for or against a motion were to the chairman personally unknown. But Root never inquired of a fellow-officer what was the member's name; he recognized him in a sympathetic manner which somehow invariably convinced the Centurion who had risen, that the chairman knew him and was interested in what he had to say.

Perhaps the Board of Management of his day will still more vividly remember Root the dinner-table companion. His easy conversation, subtle humor, store of reminiscence will not soon be forgotten by his colleagues. He had a way, peculiar to himself, of giving a wholly unexpected turn to conversation. Eleven years ago, when Root privately made known his purpose of resigning from the Century's presidency, after a shorter term than many of his predecessors, one of his fellow-officers remonstrated. Root replied, "I have served already longer than Choate or Bigelow." His companion protested: "That is no fair criterion. Both of those Century presidents died in office." "Well, of course," Root rejoined, reflectively, "there is that avenue of escape." In the casual talk of Board meetings, Root's judicious but never arrogant expression of opinion—usually stated after every one else at the table had spoken—seemed to belong altogether to his personality. Of Al Smith, notwithstanding their opposite political affiliations, he was an outspoken admirer; he had watched and met the New York Democrat when a State Constitutional Convention was wrestling with complicated public problems. Root placed Al Smith far in the forefront of men whose intellectual honesty and political capacity were important to the country. His judgments were not always thus indulgent. When the Board meeting happened to fall on the day of William J. Bryan's death, individual impressions of Bryan's career and personality had been declared by most of the diners; after which, all of them looked at Root inquiringly. Root paused for a moment, shook back his hair with a characteristic gesture, then remarked, quietly: "Well, gentlemen, I have seen much of Mr. Bryan, and I consider him one of the most ignorant public men that I have ever met."

What Elihu Root thought of the Century was shown not only by his frequent presence in the dining room, or by the fact that his membership had been third longest on our resident list, or by his tribute to the Club's past history at its seventy-fifth anniversary, but by the striking fact that, even in his latest years, he invariably came in person to the Club to select the cigars which he always sent at Christmas-time to his fellow-trustees at Hamilton. It is a personality which will be long and affectionately remembered; not less so, certainly, in that Root will remain hereafter a part of our national history. Root was a League-of-Nations adherent. If, as was at one time Washington rumor when the war ended and the Versailles conference had been called, Wilson had asked Elihu Root to serve as member of the American delegation and to participate in discussing terms of peace with the wily and seasoned European diplomats, the course of contemporary history might have been different.

Such is the Century's memorial list for 1937. Including this evening's reminiscences, it has been the present Secretary's lot, since 1917, to recall the personality, quality and achievement of 951 Centurions. All of those fellow-members were well known to us; many had been conspicuous figures in the history of City, State and Nation. Three had occupied the White House; nine had served in the national cabinet; eight had represented the United States at the head of its foreign embassies. The roll of eminent painters, authors, publishers, college presidents, lawyers, scientists, surgeons, preachers and business administrators who left us in the period is still longer. But the longest list of all is made up of older-time fellow-members whom we liked best then, and remember best now, for themselves rather than for any notable achievement. It was hard to say farewell to these good Centurions. Notwithstanding the remorseless flight of time, they will remain a group of vivid pictures in the memories of the Club-house. But the quality of the Century's living membership has not changed. It is still what it was twenty years ago and what, we all believe, it will be twenty years in the future.

ALEXANDER D. NOYES,
Secretary.

ACTS OF INCORPORATION
CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

AN ACT TO INCORPORATE
THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION

Passed March 7, 1857

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Gulian C. Verplanck, William C. Bryant, Charles M. Leupp, Asher B. Durand, John F. Kensett, William Kemble, and William H. Appleton, and such other persons as are now associated as "The Century," or may hereafter become associated with them, are hereby constituted a body corporate by the name of "THE CENTURY ASSOCIATION," to be located in the City of New York, for the purpose of promoting the advancement of Art and Literature, by establishing and maintaining a library, reading room, and gallery of art, and by such other means as shall be expedient and proper for that purpose.

SEC. 2. The said corporation shall have the power to make and adopt a Constitution and By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, for the admission, government, suspension, and expulsion of its members, the election of its officers and to define their duties, and for the safe-keeping and protection of its property and funds; and from time to time to alter or repeal such Constitution, By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations. The seven persons named in the first section of this Act shall constitute the Trustees and Managers until others are elected in their places.

SEC. 3. The said corporation may purchase and hold or lease any real or personal estate, provided that they shall not hold any real estate the value of which shall exceed the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

SEC. 4. The said corporation shall possess the general powers, and be subject to the general restrictions and liabilities prescribed in the third title of the eighteenth chapter of the first part of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 5. The Legislature may at any time alter or repeal this Act.

SEC. 6. This Act shall take effect immediately.

By a special Act of the Legislature, passed March 29th, 1883, the Association was authorized to hold real estate to the value of three hundred thousand dollars. This was superseded by the General Corporation Law, under which the Association is entitled to hold real estate to the value of three million dollars.

ARTICLE I.

This Association shall be composed of authors, artists, and amateurs of letters and the fine arts.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. The officers shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer; and there shall also be sixteen Trustees. Such officers, together with the Trustees, shall be a Board of Management. Of the Trustees not less than three shall be authors, not less than three artists, and not more than eight amateurs. No person shall be eligible as a trustee for more than three years in succession.

The officers and trustees shall be chosen at each annual meeting by ballot, and shall continue in office until the next annual meeting, or until their successors are elected.

SEC. 2. The President shall preside at the meetings of the Association; he shall also be Chairman of the Board of Management; he shall, with the Secretary, sign all written contracts and obligations of the Association, and he shall perform such other duties as the Board of Management of the Association may assign him.

The first Vice-President, or in his absence the second Vice-President, shall discharge the duties of the President in case of his absence or during a vacancy in his office.

SEC. 3. The Secretary shall keep minutes of all meetings of the Association and of the Board of Management; shall notify members of their election, issue notices for all meetings of the Association, and conduct the correspondence and keep the records; which records and correspondence shall be open to the inspection of members at all reasonable times.

SEC. 4. The Treasurer shall collect and, under the direction of the Board of Management, disburse the funds. He shall report at the monthly meeting in February and oftener if required, on the state of the funds. His accounts shall be audited by a select committee of three, appointed or elected at the monthly meeting next previous to the annual meeting.

In case of the absence, disability, or death of the Treasurer, the President or the Board of Management shall have power to appoint a Treasurer pro tem. to serve during such absence of disability, or, in case of the death of the Treasurer, until the vacancy shall have been filled.

SEC. 5. Any officer or trustee may be removed, for cause, at any meeting of the Association, upon due notice, and any vacancy in an office shall be filled for the residue of the term by the Board of Management.

ARTICLE III.

OF THE POWERS OF THE ASSOCIATION AT ITS GENERAL MEETINGS.

SECTION 1. All the corporate powers remain vested in the Association, and they may be exercised at any regular meeting, subject to the restrictions herein contained.

SEC. 2. No resolution making any disposition by way of sale, lease, or mortgage, of any of the property of the Association, or whereby an expenditure of more than two hundred and fifty dollars is or may be incurred, shall be passed except at a meeting at which sixty members shall be present, and two-thirds of those present shall vote in favor thereof, nor until the resolution shall have been referred to and considered by the Board of Management and they shall have reported their opinion thereon, which report shall be made at the monthly meeting next after the reference.

ARTICLE IV.

OF THE BOARD OF MANAGEMENT.

SECTION 1. The Board of Management shall have general charge of the affairs, funds, and property of the Association. It shall be their duty to carry out the objects and purposes thereof; and to this end they may exercise all the powers of the Association, subject to the Constitution and By-Laws, and to such action as the Association may take at its monthly or annual meetings.

SEC. 2. The Board shall have regular meetings as often as once in each month from November to June inclusive, and they shall submit a report of the affairs of the Association at each annual meeting, and shall report at other times if required. Seven members shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 3. The Board of Management may invite distinguished strangers visiting the City to partake of the privileges of the Association during their stay. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

SEC. 4. The Board of Management shall have the power to remit the dues of any member, for such cause and for such period as in their judgment may be advisable and proper. During that period such member shall not be counted in the limitation of members. [Amended December 3, 1921.]

ARTICLE V.

OF COMMITTEES AND THEIR DUTIES.

SECTION 1. COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS. The Committee on Admissions shall consist of twenty-one members, who shall be chosen by ballot at the annual meeting, and shall hold office until their successors shall be elected. At the annual meeting in January, 1889, seven members of the Committee shall be elected to serve three years, seven two years, and seven one year. At each subsequent annual meeting seven members shall be chosen to serve three years. No member of the Committee shall be eligible for reelection within one year of the expiration of three years' service on said Committee. Vacancies by death, or otherwise, may be filled by the Committee until the next annual meeting. They shall fix their own time and place of meeting. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 2. OTHER COMMITTEES. There shall be a House Committee and a Committee on Literature, each composed of three members of the Board of Management. There shall be an Art Committee composed of at least seven members, of whom at least three shall be members of the Board of Management. These Committees shall be appointed by the Board of Management within two weeks after each annual meeting. The Board may provide for the appointment of additional members of any of said

Committees from time to time; such additional members need not be members of the Board. The particular duties of each of said Committees shall be defined by the By-Laws. [Amended March 3, 1934.]

ARTICLE VI.

OF THE MEMBERS.

SECTION 1. The number of resident members is limited to one thousand.

SEC. 2. Any member who, having paid the entrance fee and the dues for one year, is absent from the United States for a continuous period of not less than twelve months shall, during his absence, be exempt from the payment of dues, provided that he shall have given to the Treasurer previous notice in writing of his intention to be absent. Absentees shall not be counted in the limitation of the number of resident members. In case the return of absentees shall increase the number above the limit prescribed, no new resident members shall be chosen until the number shall be reduced by resignation or otherwise below such limit.

SEC. 3. There shall also be a class of non-resident members, not exceeding five hundred in number, to consist of persons residing permanently more than fifty miles from the New York City Hall, and having no office nor place of business in New York. [Amended January 14, 1928.]

All officers of the Army and Navy, who are now members or who may be elected to membership, may at their option be held to be non-resident members during the tenure of their commissions.

SEC. 4. No person shall be admitted as a member of the Association unless he shall have been recommended by the Committee on Admissions, on the proposal of two members not belonging to that Committee.

The name of every person proposed for admission, whether as a resident or a non-resident member, with his residence and the names of the members proposing him, shall be posted in the rooms at least fifteen days before being acted upon by the Committee. The Committee shall receive and consider all communications in reference to the persons proposed, and make careful examination as to their qualifications; it shall pass upon each name separately, and two negative votes shall be a rejection of the candidate. The proceedings of the Committee shall be secret and confidential.

At every monthly meeting of the Association the Committee shall furnish printed lists, properly classified, of the names of the persons recommended for admission, not exceeding twenty in number, and the Association shall then proceed to vote by depositing the lists with tellers appointed by the Chairman. The erasure from the list of any name shall be considered a vote in the negative, and such negative votes to the number of one-fifth of the votes cast shall exclude from membership the person against whom they are cast.

No person so excluded shall be eligible for election within twelve months thereafter.

SEC. 5. Non-resident members may at any time, on and after the 30th April, 1896, be transferred from the list of resident members upon application in writing to the Treasurer. The members so transferred shall not be entitled to reimbursement of any part of the entrance fee.

Non-resident members shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association, except the right of voting and of holding office. They shall be subject to the Constitution and By-Laws and to all the regulations of the Association.

SEC. 6. The Secretary and Treasurer, two weeks previous to each monthly meeting, shall determine the number of vacancies in each class of members and certify the same to the Committee on Admissions.

SEC. 7. An entrance fee of one hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by each resident member, and of one hundred dollars by each non-resident member. Such payments shall be made within thirty days after notice in writing of the election, and in default of such payment the member may in the discretion of the Board of Management be deemed to have declined his election.

SEC. 8. The annual dues of resident members shall be ninety dollars, payable semi-annually in advance on the first days of May and November; and the annual dues of non- resident members shall be forty-five dollars, payable on admission, and on each first day of May thereafter.

The dues of all newly-elected members shall be computed proportionally from the first day of the month succeeding their election.

When the dues of any member shall remain unpaid for the space of three months, the Treasurer shall cause him to be notified that, unless the same be paid within one month thereafter, his membership will cease; and in case such dues shall not be paid pursuant to such notice, or such default be accounted for to the Board of Management, he shall thereupon cease to be a member.

In case any member elected to the non-resident class shall come to reside within the radius before named, or shall establish an office or place of business in the City of New York, it shall be his duty forthwith to notify the Treasurer of the Association in writing of such change, and he shall then be deemed a resident member with annual dues accordingly, and he shall also pay to the Treasurer within thirty days the additional amount of entrance fee necessary to constitute him a resident member; in default of such payment he shall cease to be a member.

It shall be the duty of each member to keep the Treasurer informed of his address.

SEC. 9. Honorary members may be elected from the membership of the Association on the recommendation of the Board of Management, at a regular monthly meeting, by unanimous vote by ballot. No more than one honorary member shall be chosen in any one year. Honorary members shall be exempt from the payment of annual dues and shall be entitled to all the privileges of the Association except that of holding office.

SEC. 10. Any member may be suspended or expelled for violation of the Constitution or By-Laws, or for any offence or misconduct which may be deemed sufficient to warrant such suspension or expulsion, by a vote, at a monthly meeting, of three-fourths of the members present, one month's previous notice having been given to the member charged. It shall be the duty of the Board of Management to report any member for action under this rule.

The Board of Management shall also have the power for a like cause, by the affirmative vote of eleven (11) of its members, after a hearing has been granted on one month's previous notice, to suspend any member from all privileges as such member indefinitely, pending further action; but any member affected thereby may require the resolution of suspension to be reported to the Association.

Membership may also be forfeited by failure to pay any indebtedness to the Association, in such manner as may be prescribed by the By-Laws.

SEC. 11. In the rooms of the Association, betting of any kind is strictly prohibited. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

ARTICLE VII.

OF MEETINGS.

SECTION 1. There shall be an annual meeting of the Association for the election of officers and members and other business. It shall be held on the second Saturday of January of each year, at 9 o'clock P. M.

SEC. 2. There shall be monthly meetings of the Association, for the election of members and other business. They shall be held on the first Saturday of December, February and March and on the first Thursday of April, May, June and November, at 9 o'clock P. M. [Amended November 3, 1928.]

SEC. 3. Special meetings may be called by the Board of Management; and they shall call a meeting at any time on the written request of ten members, which request shall specify the object of the meeting.

SEC. 4. The number of members necessary to constitute a quorum at an annual meeting shall be fifty, and at a monthly or special meeting shall be thirty.

ARTICLE VIII.

OF AMENDMENTS.

SECTION 1. This Constitution shall commence and take effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870, and the previous Constitution thereupon shall cease.

SEC. 2. No alteration or amendment of this Constitution shall be made unless the same be proposed at a previous regular meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meeting at which it may be considered, and be finally adopted at a subsequent meeting by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

SEC. 3. By-Laws, Rules, and Regulations, not inconsistent with the Charter or this Constitution, may be made, adopted, altered, or repealed at any monthly or annual meeting; provided, the proposed by-law, rule, regulation, alteration, or repeal shall have been proposed at a previous monthly meeting, and then posted in a conspicuous place in the rooms of the Association and the text of the same sent to each voting member with the notice of the meetings at which it may be considered, and shall be adopted by the votes of two-thirds of the members present at the passage thereof.

BY-LAWS

SECTION 1. No book, journal, paper, picture, statue, or other work of art, the property of the Association, shall be taken from the rooms, under any pretext whatever, except by authority of the Board of Management.

SEC. 2. On the first day of each month or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, there shall be sent to each member notice of his indebtedness to the Association on the last day of the preceding month, and if the same is not paid on or before the fifteenth day of the month the names of the members so in default, together with the amounts due, shall be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

In case any such indebtedness shall not be discharged at the expiration of a month from the date of such first notice, a second notice shall be mailed to the member in default, notifying him that further credit will not be extended to him until his indebtedness is discharged, and that in case he continues in such default for ten days thereafter, he will be excluded from all privileges of the Association until such indebtedness is paid, and such member shall thereupon, upon the expiration of such ten days, be so excluded, and notice to that effect shall thereupon be posted on a separate sheet in the hall.

At any time during such exclusion the Board of Management may declare the membership of such delinquent to be forfeited, and his name shall thereupon be dropped from the roll of members.

But before such action shall be taken by the Board of Management, it shall cause a copy of this By-Law to be mailed to the delinquent member.

A copy of this By-Law shall be sent with such second notice.

SEC. 3. A suggestion book shall be kept at the rooms in which every member is authorized to enter, under his signature, any complaint as to the management of the Association, and any suggestions he may desire to make.

SEC. 4. VISITORS:

(a) A member may introduce a guest to the rooms of the Association for one day by entering the name and address of such guest and the date in the book to be kept for that purpose. This privilege may be suspended for any particular day by the House Committee. A member may not introduce the same person as a daily guest more than twice in the calendar year, and may not introduce more than one daily guest on the same day.

(b) A member may invite visitors to the Art Gallery during any Art Exhibition of the Association through signing cards of invitation printed for that purpose, but such cards of invitation shall not entitle visitors to pass to other parts of the house.

(c) A member may introduce guests to the private dining room when he has reserved that room for an entertainment.

(d) The House Committee, at the request in writing of a member, may extend the privileges of the Association for a total period of one month in any twelve months to a guest whose residence is more than fifty miles from the City Hall. Extension of this time may, on the recommendation of the House Committee, be granted by the Board of Management. A member may not obtain from the House Committee such privileges for more than one guest at a time, nor for the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months.

(e) Guests while enjoying the privileges of the Association as provided in paragraphs (a) and (d) are on the same footing as non-resident members, except that they may not introduce visitors and may not be present at any business meeting of the Association. Nor shall the House Committee grant the same privileges to the same guest more than once in a period of twelve months.

(f) A member who obtains admission to the Club House for a guest becomes responsible for the conduct of such guest and for any indebtedness of such guest to the Association.

(g) The Board of Management may modify these rules to meet special cases.

(h) It is the duty of the House Committee to enforce the provisions of this section and promptly to report to the Board of Management all cases of persistent violation thereof.

(i) In case of violation of any of the provisions of this section, the House Committee may summarily suspend the privileges accorded therein with regard to any member or visitor for a period not exceeding ten days, and in all cases of violation the Board of Management may suspend such privileges for such period as in their discretion the interest of the Association may require.

SEC. 5. The House Committee shall have the charge of furnishing supplies, employing stewards and servants, keeping the rooms and premises of the Association in order for use, regulating the place, character and the extent of recreation and amusements in the Club House, and enforcing the rule as to admission of visitors. [Amended November 5, 1927.]

The care of newspapers and current periodicals is entrusted to the House Committee.

SEC. 6. The Committee on Literature shall have charge of the Library, and of the supply of books, and shall subscribe for periodicals, and newspapers. Loud or continuous conversation shall not be carried on in the Library, nor, except on Saturday nights, shall refreshments be served therein.

SEC. 7. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all works of art owned or possessed by the Association; and it shall be their duty to make arrangements for exhibition, at monthly and annual meetings, of the works of artists of the Association, and other works of art, at their discretion. They shall keep a catalogue of the works of art owned or possessed by the Association, or exhibited in its rooms, and shall record therein every such work, with the name of the author, the title of the work, and the time of exhibition. The Committee on Art shall have charge of all decorations of the rooms. No work of art shall be accepted as a gift, or purchased by the Association, until the Committee on Art has made a report thereon to the Board of Management.

SEC. 8. The expenditures of the House Committee, and the Committees on Literature and Art, shall be limited to such sums as the Board of Management shall prescribe.

SEC. 9. A perfect list of members, officers, and committees shall be kept posted up in the rooms of the Association; and such list shall be corrected under the direction of the Treasurer and Secretary, from time to time, as changes occur.

SEC. 10. The above By-Laws shall go into effect on the second Saturday of January, 1870.

SEC. 11. A Nominating Committee shall annually be constituted as follows. The Board of Management shall at its first autumn meeting propose as candidates for such committee the names of seven members of the Club, of whom two shall be members of the Board of Management, not eligible for reëlection, and two shall be members of the Committee on Admissions. The names shall be posted in the Club-house at least twenty days before the December monthly meeting of the Club. At any time not later than ten days before the December monthly meeting, additional candidates may be proposed for the Committee, provided that in each case the proposal, indorsed by twenty-five resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club.

All the names proposed by either of the above methods shall be printed in a single list, the names proposed by the Board of Management being designated by an asterisk. From this list, which shall be distributed at the monthly meeting in December, the Club shall elect by ballot the Nominating Committee. Each member may vote for not more than seven names on the list, and the seven candidates receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected.

The Nominating Committee shall at the earliest practicable moment post in the Club-house the names of candidates for all the positions to be filled. Additional candidates for such positions or any of them, may be nominated, and shall be posted, provided that in each case the nomination indorsed by fifty resident members, be presented in writing to the Secretary of the Club not later than one week before the Annual Meeting.

The Secretary of the Club shall prepare printed lists of all candidates named by either of the aforesaid methods, the names to be grouped under the titles of the positions to be filled; the candidates for Trustees to be arranged in three groups, designated respectively as Authors, Artists, and Amateurs, and all names proposed by the Nominating Committee to be designated by an asterisk. These lists shall be distributed to members at the Annual Meeting, and shall serve as ballots in the election, provided that nothing herein be construed to restrict the right of any member to vote by means of written names for persons whose names do not appear in print.

SEC. 12. An Investment Committee consisting of four members and the Treasurer shall be appointed by the Board of Management annually. It shall be the duty of this committee to supervise the investments of the Club and to advise the Treasurer with respect to the purchase and sale of its investments.

HOUSE RULES

I.

Admittance to the Club-house cannot be claimed after one o'clock A. M.

II.

The Supper Room will be closed at midnight. No refreshments from the Table will be served except in that room.

III.

Members will not be admitted inside the Bar at any time.

IV.

The Bar will be closed at one o'clock A. M., except on Sundays, when it will be closed at midnight.

V.

No game of billiards shall be commenced after twelve P. M. on Saturday nights, or after one A. M. on other nights.

VI.

The lights throughout the house shall be extinguished at two A. M.

RULES
COMMITTEE ON ADMISSIONS.

ADOPTED BY THE ASSOCIATION, DECEMBER 2D, 1893.

I.

The name, residence, and profession or occupation of every candidate for membership in this Association shall be entered in a special book kept for this purpose; such entry shall be accompanied by the signatures of the proposer and seconder. The Secretary of the Committee may make such entry upon written authorization by the proposer and seconder. When such entry is properly completed, the Secretary shall add the candidate's name to the posted list, with date corresponding to the date of the completed entry.

II.

The proposer of a candidate shall send promptly a letter of recommendation to the Secretary of the Committee on Admissions, giving the name, place of residence, and profession or occupation of the candidate, with such statement of his qualifications as the proposer may deem proper. The seconder shall likewise send a letter of recommendation.

III.

If it shall appear that no letters have been received from the proposer and seconder of any candidate, when his name is called up for consideration at a meeting of the committee, the name shall be passed; and the Secretary shall immediately notify the proposer and seconder that, unless the required letters are received before the next following meeting, the candidate shall be deemed withdrawn, and his name dropped from the list.
